Section A: Research Methods

Observational research aims to gain a close and detailed understanding of a particular area of study, usually a small group, through the researcher studying the group in their natural environment. This form of study can be either participant or non-participant.

Observational studies can also be conducted in a covert or overt way. In the case of overt observation the researchers will reveal their identity to the group they are studying; in covert observation they will remain hidden.

Observational studies tend to produce qualitative rather than quantitative data. Although the studies may produce in-depth data, they can lack reliability and there may be difficulties in recording the observations.

- 1 (a) In sociological research, what is meant by the terms:
- (i) participant observation [2]
  - (ii) quantitative data [2]
  - (iii) reliability. [2]
- (b) Describe the difference between participant and non-participant observation. [4]
- (c) Describe one advantage and one disadvantage in carrying out overt observation. [4]
- (d) Describe two problems in carrying out covert observation. [4]
- (e) Describe two reasons why participant observers may find it difficult to record their observations accurately when studying the group. [4]
- (f) Describe two strengths and two limitations of qualitative data in sociological research. [8]

Section B: Culture and Socialisation

- 2 Many sociologists believe that people are socialised into the norms and values of society, rather than inheriting them.
- (a) What is meant by the term values? [2]
- (b) Describe two ways that people learn the norms and values of society. [4]
- (c) Explain why sociologists think socialisation is more important than instinct in shaping social behaviour. [6]
- (d) To what extent do people who live within a culture share the same norms and values? [8]
- 3 It has been claimed that children generally experience more social control than adults.
- (a) What is meant by the term social control? [2]
- (b) Describe two ways children are treated differently compared to adults in modern industrial societies. [4]
- (c) Explain how children are controlled in modern industrial societies. [6]
- (d) To what extent does the experience of childhood vary according to factors such as social class, gender and culture? [8]

Section C: Social Stratification

- 4 Professional groups, such as doctors and lawyers, are often thought to have a higher social status compared to manual workers.
- (a) What is meant by the term status? [2]
- (b) Describe two characteristics of professional groups. [4]
- (c) Explain why working class people often find it difficult to move into the middle class. [6]
- (d) How far does a person's social class background continue to affect their life chances? [8]
- 5 Many sociologists believe that gender role socialisation is different for boys and girls and this has major effects on their life chances.
- (a) What is meant by gender role socialisation? [2]
- (b) Describe two ways that boys may be treated differently compared to girls in the family. [4]
- (c) Explain how gender socialisation in childhood may affect women's employment opportunities. [6]
- (d) How far have women's life chances improved in recent years? [8]

Section D: Power and Authority

- 6 In democracies pressure groups can be an important means of influencing government.
- (a) What is meant by the term pressure group? [2]
  - (b) Describe two ways through which pressure groups try to influence governments. [4]
  - (c) Explain how individuals can influence governments in a democracy. [6]
  - (d) Marxists claim that it is elite groups that hold power in modern industrial societies. How far is this claim true? [8]
- 7 The media may play a role in political socialisation but sociologists also believe other influences have an effect on people's political attitudes.
- (a) What is meant by the term political socialisation? [2]
  - (b) Describe two ways that the media might influence a person's political view. [4]
  - (c) Explain how a person's social background may influence their political views. [6]
  - (d) How far have the factors that affect voting behaviour changed in recent years? [8]
