General Comments

This paper was accessible to most of the candidates who were correctly entered for this level. The majority of candidates did well in most parts of the paper and in particular candidates seemed to enjoy and take an interest in the 'wild life' topic.

This year the majority of candidates used their time and skill appropriately when handling the questions. There were only a few cases where responses were unnecessarily prolonged. There were some cases where spelling errors and poor use of grammatical structures affected the language marks. Some noticeable misspelt words were those containing similar sounding letters, such as zey/zuaad and seen/suaad/sey. There were a few candidates who did not relate the question to the given passages and wrote their own ideas instead for some of the answers. This affected the accreditation of marks as they were not showing that they understood the content of the texts.

Response to individual questions

Question 1

This question was handled well by most candidates. In quite a few cases, candidates used a substitute word/form and lost a mark. Similarly there were some ambiguous sentences and/or the wrong use of a word, neither of which scored any marks. In a few cases candidates lifted the whole related sentence from the text instead of composing their own sentence which resulted in them losing a mark.

Question 2

In some cases candidates appeared not to understand the task in which they were required to match the given phrase exactly within the content of the passage. They either made up their own equivalent phrase or picked up/mismatched the wrong one. As a result marks were lost.

Question 3

Part (a) related to the condition of zoos in olden times and part (b) related to the behaviour and attitude of spectators. Most candidates' responses were appropriate in both these parts.

(c) This part was handled well by the majority of candidates, most of whom gained full marks.

(d) Most candidates understood the question about the Panda in regard to the zoo's performance and gained two or three marks.

(e) This part of the question seeks information about the candidate's own point of view with regard to the protection of wild animals. Nearly all of the candidates did well in this question with most achieving full marks.

Question 4

(a) This part of the question was done well by the majority of candidates.

(b) A thorough understanding of the text is required to answer this question appropriately to gain full marks. Some candidates merely copied a few relevant bits and so lost marks, whereas those who comprehended the text in depth achieved two or three marks.

(c) Most candidates provided a good comparison and gave relevant examples from the text, gaining 3 or 4 marks. Some relied on their own logical views as examples and as such lost marks.

(d) Again, some candidates came up with their own reasons for animals' psychological problems rather than with reference to the text and failed to score full marks.

(e) There were mixed responses for this part of the question which seeks information on the issues related to the Panda. Only a few candidates were able to achieve full marks. A few candidates got mixed up with the information given in Question 3 (d) and lost marks.

Question 5

Nearly all candidates did well in both parts of this question; most doing particularly well in part (b) where they were asked to provide their own opinion about zoos. There were a few cases where candidates misunderstood the rubric instructions that states there is a total of 140 words for both parts of the question. The two parts of the question are marked separately for content. A few candidates considered this as one task and included both part's contents in one piece of writing. Where there was clear indication of both responses, candidates did not lose marks, however to avoid losing marks it is important to ensure that both parts are clearly covered.

Paper 8686/03

Essay

GENERAL:

This component tests candidates' ability to write a composition in Urdu on one of a range of five topics. Overall, the performance of candidates was good, with a high proportion of excellent scripts. The problem for most candidates is not writing accurate Urdu but responding to the stimulus topics in an organised and well-structured way.

There were five given topics, on which candidates were expected to write between 250 and 400 words.

The topics this year were:

'naujavan' 'Youth'

1 'nawjavanon apne mulk ke behter mustaqbil ke zamyn heyn'

'Young people are the guarantors of their country's future.'

'seyr-o siyahat' 'Tourism'

2 'ap ke mulk men gheyr mulki siyahon ki tadad keyse barhai ja sakti hey?'

'How can the number of foreign tourists to your country be increased?'

'aludagi' 'Pollution'

3 'aludagi ki rok tham ke liye zaruri yqdamat'

'The steps needed to control pollution.'

'sainsi awr tybbi inkishafat' 'Scientific and medical discoveries'

4 'sainsi taraqi men mazhab ka hath'

'The role of religion in scientific progress.'

'ghyza awr mashrubat' 'Food and drink'

5 'ap ke mulk men fast food ke asrat'

'The effects of fast food on your country.'

The wide range of topics allowed candidates the opportunity to choose one and demonstrate their linguistic skills in Urdu. Of course, at this Advanced Level, not only is a high standard of written Urdu expected but it is equally important that candidates are able to organise and structure their work, present an argument where appropriate and do so in an interesting way.

This component is marked out of 40: 24 are awarded for quality of language and 16 for content, structure and organisation.

Two topics attracted far more candidates than the rest. The most popular two were:

1 'nawjavanon apne mulk ke behter mustaqbil ke zamyn heyn'

'Young people are the guarantors of their country's future.'

and

3 'aludagi ki rok tham ke liye zaruri yqdamat'

'The steps needed to control pollution.'

The first topic, on the young generation, is always popular and is a subject which is highly pertinent to the lives of candidates, which is one reason why there were some very good compositions on this topic. It is easier to produce a good essay if the content is heartfelt. Some essays were passionately written but not well balanced, seeming to view the young people of today as either perfect exemplars of humanity who would go out and put the world to rights if only they had the chance, or seeing them as materialistic, selfish and unable to follow the examples of the previous generations who had sacrificed so much to create Pakistan. On the other hand, there were some outstanding essays on this topic, the best of which, in addition to being well structured and balanced, were also a pleasure to read.

The second popular title, on controlling pollution, was generally not so well answered because although many candidates were clearly well informed about the subject, their compositions were severely unbalanced; in some cases three-quarters of the essay was taken up in giving great detail about the causes and effects of pollution. It was only in the closing sections that they turned their pens to describing what was necessary to reduce pollution. Although it is relevant to spend some time discussing pollution and its effects, the title of the essay was 'The steps needed to control pollution.' Such essays could not receive high marks for content because they were not focussed enough on the specific question asked.

The third most popular topic was:

5 'ap ke mulk men fast food ke asrat'

'The effects of fast food on your country.'

The responses to this topic tended to be somewhat superficial. While being reasonably well attempted by most candidates, there was little discussion of anything beyond the direct effects on health of the trend of eating fast food. At this level a broader discussion is expected, perhaps including social, economic and cultural implications if candidates are to achieve the highest grades.

The fourth most popular topic was on tourism:

2 'ap ke mulk men gheyr mulki siyahon ki tadad keyse barhai ja sakti hey?'

'How can the number of foreign tourists to your country be increased?'

While this topic was not very popular, it was well answered by most of those who attempted it. Candidates wrote about what foreign tourists wanted and expected, then highlighted the problems of the tourist industry created by the political and security situation and produced relevant suggestions for making improvements.

4 'sainsi taraqi men mazhab ka hath'

'The role of religion in scientific progress.'

Very few candidates attempted this topic, on science and religion, and they tended to be rather simplistic in their approach.

CONCLUSION

The best essays in any topic area were those which produce a structured and considered response to the title, with an introduction of several cogent points relating to the title and a concluding paragraph.

Linguistically, most essays were almost error free, with a wide range of vocabulary, complex sentences containing dependent clauses, use of the passive voice, appropriate use of idiom and metaphor, and where appropriate relevant quotations.

While the overall performance was good, with most candidates displaying very good writing skills, many essays would have been much improved by stricter observance of the rubrics relating to the prescribed word limits.

It is the second part of the assessment criteria, on content, planning and organisation, where candidates tend to lose marks. Part of this is in conforming to the rubric, which requires candidates to be able to write concisely on any particular topic. Failure to contain the essay within the prescribed word-limit reduces marks for content. Examiners set a range of between 250-400 words for the composition and the Examiners' guidelines state that Examiners should read up to about 10% above this figure and ignore anything over 500 words. This means that candidates who write too much are penalised for content and planning because they are unlikely to have reached a concluding paragraph. That being said, very many candidates wrote well-planned and interesting essays in excellent Urdu.
