Russia targets inbound tourism

Political and economic factors have affected tourism in Russia since 2014, which resulted in an increase in domestic tourism to the Black Sea resorts of Sochi and Anapa. There has also been an increase in the demand for winter tourism in the country, especially from Chinese visitors.

Market research shows that the Russian Government is keen to take advantage of the weaker currency to boost inbound tourism. It is promoting the favourable exchange rate, alongside its improved tourism infrastructure and simplified visa processes, to attract more visitors.

Hosting two major football events in 2017 and in 2018 provided the Russian Tourist Industry Union with an opportunity to further target inbound visitor numbers, offering packages with football and non-football related activities. It is hoped that the 2018 Football World Cup wolf mascot will not only promote the event and entertain crowds at the stadiums, but will also become part of a longer-term brand image for the country.
